

The Spring Migration of 1901

It is our desire to record in the future the dates of spring arrivals at as many points as possible in Pennsylvania and New Jersey, and we ask the co-operation of all who are willing to aid. Blanks for keeping the record will be furnished upon application to the Club. For the spring of 1901 we are able to publish five records which are all more or less incomplete. The migration was a peculiar one, as owing to the almost continuous cloudy and rainy weather that prevailed during April and May, the usual well-marked "waves" of warblers were not observed at all at some stations, and the number of migrating birds seemed very much less than usual, doubtless due to a rapid flight after continued hindrance by unfavorable weather. May 10-12 seems to have been the time of the greatest migration.
